1. The principal Chinese Communist university for military and political training is in Chiamussu (130-21, 46-49). Courses are given in military science, politics, art, iron work (?) and literature. There are approximately 4,000 students divided into three classes and the entire course takes five years to complete. Seventy students who completed the first term at this university in the spring of 1947 were sent to the southern zone of Korea for underground operations.
2. There are branch schools of the university at Harbin, Tsitsihar, Tunghua (125-57, 41-41) and Lungching (129-23, 42-45). These schools concentrate on military and political courses. Students majoring in the military course are required to take 20 per cent of their work in political subjects and those majoring in the political course are required to take 20 per cent of their training in military courses. The number of students in these branch schools varies from 2,000 to 3,000 (per school). Eighty per cent of the students enrolled in these schools are taking the military course.
3. In all of the schools the division of students is approximately 50 per cent Korean and 50 per cent Chinese. The instructors are Korean and Chinese who have graduated from Soviet schools.

4. In addition to the large Officers' Training School at Chiamussu there are three schools for the training of Air Corps, Tank Corps and Intelligence personnel.
5. The Air Corps school has 500 students who are drawn from various schools in Communist territory. They are enrolled for a ten months course. There are eleven Chinese Communist instructors who studied in the USSR and three Soviet Army officers acting as instructors. The Japanese fighter planes used (for training) were given to the Communists by the Soviets.

6. The Tank Corps School has 500 students drawn from middle schools. The course is six months. There are nine Chinese trained by the Soviets and two Soviet Tank Corps officers acting as instructors. For demonstration they have nine light Japanese tanks and two heavy Russian tanks.
7. The Intelligence School has 150 students, middle school graduates, who enroll for a six month course. There are seven special Chinese correspondents (?) and one Russian who act as instructors. In addition to reporting, the students learn wire telegraphy, radio transmission and codes. For equipment they have five Japanese radios and two Russian radios. Following graduation the students are sent to Nationalist territory.
8. All of the schools are patterned after the Soviet counterpart and are under the supervision of a Russian, Colonel Stalecov (Chinese phoneticization). Promising students will be sent to the USSR for further training.
